The issues related to climate change, environment and sustainable development are nowadays at the center of the political and economic agenda and of the international commitment of the major industrialized and developing countries.

There are many ethical and economic issues at stake, because the battle for sustainable energy engages various fronts: security of supply, accessibility, climate protection and resource efficiency.

According to the World Energy Trilemma Index 2018, Italy is among the countries that best manage the so-called 'energy trilemma', being able at the same time to grant safe, sustainable and economic energy for its citizens.

All countries, beyond their economic weight, can aim to a balanced energy system. Security, equitable accessibility and energy sustainability can make the economy grow and transform societies; however, the complex problems that energy industry has to play cannot be solved by individual countries.

The conference aims to be an opportunity to reflect on the need to mediate between global issues and national interests, as well as short and long-term perspectives, in order to solicit a comparison of crucial importance for citizens, companies and institutions
